ADVISICON MICROSOFT® PROJECT SERVER ENTERPRISE PROJECT & PORTFOLIO MANAGEMENT IMPLEMENTATION CASE STUDY

Banjercito was founded in Mexico in 1947 as the National Bank of the Army, Navy and Air Force. Over the years it has had to adapt to significant changes in the Mexican banking system and has evolved to be a national credit and development institution that forms part of the Federal Public Administration system, but still retaining its corporate identity.

Banjercito reinvented its identity and reengineered its services to meet the realities of the modern business climate, strategically repositioning itself in order to offer its customers efficient, practical services that meet the demands of today's market.

Business Situation

Banjercito needed a technological platform to support the project management best practices to help it standardize processes, which was critical to its efforts to successfully deliver strategic projects that would realign its services and reinvent its image.

Banjercito did not have the tools, technology or methodology in place to manage their strategic projects. The consequences were projects that grew out of control in scope, projects that were not completed on time and that were over budget and costly initiatives that failed to create the desired results. Staff members assigned to projects had to continually work overtime because project resources were constantly over allocated.

Solution Delivered

Advisicon deployed Microsoft® Project Server, standardized processes and workflows and trained users in the IT group at Banjercito in the Microsoft® tools and in the best practices of project management.

Advisicon worked with mangers and project contributors to customize Microsoft® Project Server and to align their project investments with the business strategy of the organization.
